INVESTMENT COMMITTEE: HOUSE VIEWS

June 30, 2021

CURRENT MARKET CONDITIONS

Dueling Narratives

- After the strong reopening rally, stock price gains have slowed from their furious trajectory, while interest rates have pulled back.
- Measures of economic activity, spending, and profits are well ahead of anyone's expectations from a year ago. However, uncertainty around the forward trajectory of growth, inflation, policy support, and virus conditions have introduced volatility to markets.
- Unique conditions—a full economic reboot with unprecedented fiscal and monetary stimulus—mean there is no playbook for the next phase. As a result, markets may be more sensitive to changes in sentiment, as two primary narratives emerge.

- Record levels of household wealth, extraordinary stimulus, and vaccine availability set the stage for continued above-trend growth.
- Stocks are growing into their prices through earnings well ahead of expectations. Meanwhile, bonds offer a limited return opportunity for investors.
- As supply chain and labor market disruptions begin to normalize, conditions are favorable for continued corporate earnings strength.

The Case for Caution

- We have likely reached peak growth as the short-term fiscal stimulus jolt must be replaced by longer-term, sustainable consumer and business spending.
- Virus variants pose a difficult-to-assess threat of accelerating cases and renewed restrictions.
- Inflation uncertainty increases the risk of a policy surprise, potentially forcing the Fed's hand in paring back ultra-accommodative support sooner than expected.

PORTFOLIO OUTLOOK

- Our recovery-focused positioning has added value year to date as equities have outpaced bonds, U.S. stocks have outperformed the rest of the world, and more cyclical value equities have recovered sharply.
- We now face an important transition as the fiscal support and stimulus programs that served as rocket fuel to the recovery begin to wind down, and the growth baton passes from the public to the private sector. So far, brisk consumer spending and business investment are positive signs.
- Inflationary risks are more balanced, with competing threats of cyclical or secular inflation muddying the forward path and pace of Fed policy.

Amid this backdrop, below is a summary of our primary portfolio positioning themes.

Portfolio Positioning

Overweight Equities

We maintain our modest overweight to stocks relative to bonds. While the sharp rebound has moved equity valuations into rich territory, earnings growth has surprised to the upside. Meanwhile, bond valuations may be even more stretched given levels of rates and spreads.

While we remain constructive on the case for equities, we acknowledge the potential for lower levels of return and heightened volatility. We will monitor conditions closely for favorable rebalancing opportunities and encourage investors to appropriately plan for near-term liquidity needs.

Global Equity Composition

The U.S. continues to lead the world in a range of recovery measures, whether economic or health-related. We favor domestic equities due to the more dynamic U.S. economy, stronger policy response, and vaccination advantage.

Outside the U.S., we currently favor emerging over developed markets due to near-term tailwinds from a global restocking cycle and longer-term support from favorable demographics. However, we are mindful of risks stemming from China's outsized influence and the uneven access to COVID-19 vaccines.

U.S. Equity Composition

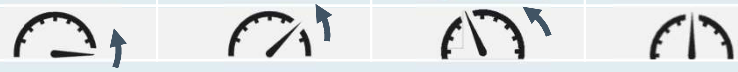
We maintain modest tilts toward value and small-cap stocks within U.S. equities. This positioning reflects our belief that the economic expansion has room to run through 2022, with levels of spending and a re-steepening of the yield curve serving as tailwinds.

Looking ahead, we are assessing strategies to complement our cyclical risk with more defensive positions within equities and fixed income.

INVESTMENT COMMITTEE DASHBOARD – JUNE 30, 2021

Macroeconomic Policy Framework

Monetary	Fiscal	Regulatory	Trade



While monetary policy remains a potent tailwind, inflationary pressures have forced a more hawkish tone by the Fed. Meanwhile, fiscal stimulus and support programs are waning, uncertainty around tax policy is growing, and regulatory and antitrust threats pose risks, particularly for mega-cap tech and the energy sector.

Portfolio Themes

- Overweight equities over fixed income
  Stocks continue to be priced attractively relative to bonds. Recent gains have been supported by earnings.
- Overweight U.S. vs. non-U.S. equities
  The U.S. maintains a strong global position, leading the world in the economic recovery.
- Overweight small-cap and value stocks within U.S. equities
  More economically-sensitive companies stand to prosper as the economic recovery continues.
- Overweight emerging vs. developed international
  Emerging markets stand to benefit from normalizing supply chains, a global restocking cycle, and demographic trends.
- Interest rate positioning
  We maintain a neutral duration stance within portfolios, while favoring sectors with strong fundamentals and attractive yield.

The portfolio positioning guidelines described above represent baseline views. Fulfillment within specific portfolios may vary depending upon operational differences, client circumstances, or other factors. Opinions expressed are subject to change without notice. Key thoughts	We seek a balanced approach by managing duration exposure and a diversified mix of defensive positions and high-quality yield.

Commodities

Maintain a preference for indirect commodities exposure via equity positioning across style (value) and region (emerging market), for better long-term risk/return potential.

Alternatives

We are increasingly focused on lower-volatility strategies as we position for potential headwinds within fixed income markets moving forward.
